The elephant is still in the room

$50 million.
Lawmakers still can't agree on the best way to solve the school district's budget deficit.

The elephant didn't flee City Council chambers when the legislative body broke for the summer, and it will be waiting for the 17 members today when they return to the room.

How does a cash-strapped city fund its cash-strapped schools? The powers that be are still undecided.

Yesterday, both Mayor Michael Nutter and Council President Darrell Clarke discussed plans to raise the $50 million needed to close the school district's gap, but which plan the city will adopt remains a mystery.

Yesterday, Clarke said his plan will be introduced at today's meeting. He wants to buy the 24 closed school buildings from the district for $50 million and sell them off. After the city is reimbursed, the rest will be go to the district.

Councilman Curtis Jones Jr. said eight of the properties have already garnered interest and could sell collectively for more than $100 million.

Mayor Michael Nutter, on the other hand, wants to take Gov. Tom Corbett's approach and use the sales tax extension.

Quoted

"Everyone has to do their part."

Councilwoman Jannie Blackwell, on how to best handle school funding

The sales tax, currently at 2 percent, was slated to drop to 1 percent at the end of the year. Corbett said he would allow the city to retain the 2 percent, and the excess funds would be directed toward the schools.

In the past, Clarke and other Council members have expressed an interest in directing half of the extra cash flow to fund city employee pensions and direct the other half to schools.

Clarke, however, would not say whether the Nutter/Corbett plan would be introduced to City Council.

Nutter said yesterday that splitting the tax revenue would require state legislation that he said could cause trouble.

In the strong-mayor form of government, the mayor can suggest legislation, but it must be introduced by a City Council member.

Hopefully the elephant brought a book.

Fund started for supplies

Dubbed the Philadelphia Education Supplies Fund, the multiyear fundraising campaign is a public and private partnership that will raise money to provide notebooks, paper, pencils and pens for public, parochial and charter K-12 students.

Quoted

"But the lack of supplies does not come close to topping the long list of concerns we're hearing from teachers, parents and students." Jerry Jordan

Nutter also issued a citywide challenge to the business and philanthropic communities as well as citizens to raise $500,000 by Oct. 15 and $2.5 million in the next five years. The city has pledged $200,000 this year and $1 million in the next five years.

The supplies fund will be administered by United Way of Greater Philadelphia and Southern New Jersey.

The announcement came as the school district and teachers' union are embroiled in gridlocked contract negotiations. Teachers have said recently they've purchased classroom supplies on their own dimes. TOMMY ROWAN

DELAWARE STATE POLICE

Cops: Man fired at neighbor

Delaware State Police on Monday arrested James Erbaugh, 66, for allegedly opening fire on his neighbor. Investigators said Erbaugh at 6:30 p.m. called troopers to Firetower Road, complaining ATVs were being driven on the street.

Though officers saw no traffic offenses, they made contact with some youths, who were released. Erbaugh was contacted and "appeared despondent with the outcome," according to police. Troopers were soon called back for a report that Erbaugh was shooting at a neighbor that was outside with six other people, four of them young children.

Further investigation allegedly revealed Erbaugh came out of his house armed with a handgun, shouted "harassing statements" to his neighbor and fired several shots in the direction of a dirt pile located near the neighbor's home. METRO

Cops seek to bag Coach burglars who crashed car

Officers recovered dozens of bags. / DELAWARE STATE POLICE

Investigators said an alarm was activated around 4 a.m. at the Coach outlet located at 34986 Midway Outlet Dr. Responding troopers saw a black 2007 Mercedes-Benz SUV leaving the plaza and tried to perform a traffic stop.

The vehicle allegedly disregarded the troopers' signal and sped off north on Coastal Highway. As the SUV approached a slight curve in the road at the North DuPont Highway merge near Milford, it allegedly rear-ended a 2002 Ford Taurus in the northbound lane, causing both vehicles to spin out of control.

Police said the Mercedes came to a stop in the highway's center median and its two occupants fled on foot across the southbound lanes. Troopers were able to recover from the crash 85 Coach purses with an estimated value of more than $29,000, but the suspects remain at large.

SEPTA to offer free trips on BSL Sunday for game

E-A-G-L-E-S. From 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., take the train to the game in South Philly, free of charge.

Who said there's no such thing as a free ride? Not SEPTA.

In honor of the Eagles' home opener game, SEPTA partnered with sponsor Miller Lite to offer free trips Sunday between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. on the Broad Street Line.

No fares or transfers are needed.

"The eight-hour free-ride window provides plenty of time for travel to and from Lincoln Financial Field, where the Eagles and Chargers face off at 1 p.m.," SEPTA officials said in a release.

Football fans can take the Broad Street Line to the Eagles' stadium and other Sports Complex venues via the AT&T Station at Broad Street and Pattison Avenue.

Though this is the first time Miller Lite Free Rides have been offered in Philadelphia, the program has provided safe trips to more than 3.6 million people since its inception 25 years ago, gaining the support of local public safety agencies and community organizations around the country.

Need more info?

Route and schedule information is available by:

- Calling 1-800-FREE-RIDES
- Texting "FREE RIDES" to 90464
- Visiting www.miller-lite.com/freerides

To further accommodate patrons, SEPTA will also on Sunday supplement regularly scheduled service with 10 extra Sports Express trips on the Broad Street Line, running every 10 minutes starting at 10:10 a.m. METRO

Syrian forces were responsible for Banias massacres: UN report

U.N. rights investigators have established that Syrian government forces were almost certainly responsible for two massacres last May in which up to 450 civilians were killed, a report published yesterday said.

The report documents nine mass killings in all, attributing all but one to government forces, but said both government and rebel fighters had committed war crimes including murder, hostage-taking and shelling of civilians.

With more than 100,000 dead in the Syrian war, there was little sign that reports of atrocities would spur international action until last month, when allegations that President Bashar al-Assad's forces had gassed hundreds of civilians sparked a threat of U.S. strikes, and furious international diplomacy.

The killings in Baida and Ras al-Nabaa, two pockets of rebel sympathizers surrounded by villages loyal to Assad on the outskirts of the town of Banias, did not involve fighting with rebels and appeared designed to send a message of deterrence.

"Testimonies were consistent that members of the National Defence Forces were actively involved in the raids and in many cases leading them," the 42-page report said. REUTERS

Apparently executed

In Baida, it said between 150 and 250 civilians had allegedly been killed, including 30 women, apparently executed, who were found in one house. It said armed rebels were not active in the area at the time.

Big program

Chemical weapons took decades to build, will take years to destroy

If Saddam Hussein's Iraq is anything to go by, destroying Syria's massive chemical weapons arsenal will mean checking dozens of far-flung sites in a war zone while the government employs delaying tactics to hide the banned munitions, an expert involved in past U.N. disarmament missions said.

Bashar al-Assad's chemical weapons network comprises remote underground bunkers where hundreds of tons of nerve agents are stored, scud missiles and artillery shells, possibly armed with cyanide, and factories deep inside hostile territory used to produce mustard or VX gas, experts believe.

"It's big. He has one of the biggest chemical weapons programs in the region and even in the world," said Dieter Rothbacher, a former U.N. weapons inspector in Iraq who trained members of the team that just returned from Syria.

"There are calculations that to secure them up to 75,000 ground troops are needed," he said in a Reuters interview. "It took us three years to destroy that stuff under U.N. supervision in Iraq."

Putin foe. Navalny to challenge Moscow election defeat in court

Russian President Vladimir Putin's most prominent opponent, Alexei Navalny, said yesterday he would file hundreds of legal challenges to Moscow mayoral election results he says were rigged to give a Kremlin ally victory.

Sergei Sobyanin, who was appointed mayor by the Kremlin in 2010 but called an early election to increase his legitimacy, won the vote on Sunday with 51.3 percent — enough to avoid a second-round runoff against Navalny, who had 27.3 percent.

Navalny, an anti-corruption blogger who helped lead street protests against Putin in the past two years, has refused to accept the results and has cited election observers whose count put Sobyanin below the 50 percent threshold. REUTERS

Americans marked the 12th anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks with solemn ceremonies and pledges not to forget the nearly 3,000 killed when hijacked jetliners crashed into the World Trade Center, the Pentagon and a Pennsylvania field, in 2001.

In New York City, residents repeated the ritual of reading the names of the 2,983 people who died that day.

In Washington, President Barack Obama and Vice President Joe Biden marked the first moment of silence on the South Lawn of the White House, as a bell tolled.

Quoted

"I've always thought it was a beautiful expression, and I try to hold on to it on bright September mornings like today. It's a way of saying that we honor those we've lost by continuing their work, serving our country and helping others." Kerry

"Friends of mine who lost friends in a different context long ago have a simple saying: 'Every day is extra,'" said Secretary of State John Kerry, who served in the Vietnam War.

At the Flight 93 National Memorial in Pennsylvania, the National Park Service held a memorial service yesterday starting at 9:45 a.m. that included a reading of the names of the Flight 93 passengers and crew, a ringing of bells, a wreath-laying and brief remarks.

A number of cities held ceremonies, including 21-gun salutes, moments of silence and memorial services to remember those who lost their lives. REUTERS

Obamacare data system gets security OK

The data system supporting President Barack Obama's health-care reform law has been tested and certified as secure for millions of Americans who will seek health coverage beginning on Oct. 1, meeting a critical deadline for launching the program.

Concerns over whether consumer information would be secure in time were raised last month, when a government report said it could take until Sept. 30 to sign off on the system's data protections, leaving little room for error before Obamacare is due to go live. REUTERS

Gwyneth Paltrow is fighting back against Graydon Carter and Vanity Fair. The A-lister is telling her friends and acquaintances not to talk with the magazine regarding an exposé about her that is in the works. "Vanity Fair is threatening to put me on the cover of their magazine," Paltrow wrote in a mass email to friends and associates, according to the New York Times. "If you are asked for quotes or comments, please decline. Also, I recommend you all never do this magazine again."

What is she hiding? Is it something about her marriage to Chris Martin? That the fastidiously all-organic actress sometimes likes to dig in to a bag of Funyons? That she secretly thinks Mario Batali's Crocs are stupid? What is it?! What has Gwyneth so scared?

Digging through the trash at Fringe

One of the late, great George Carlin's most famous routines skewered our obsession with "stuff," namely the fact that we refer to our accumulation of things as "stuff" and to other people's clutter with another, unprintable S-word. According to Geoff Sobelle, that doesn't just apply to our present-day stuff.

"Archeologists unearthing a really important Etruscan vase are really just digging through somebody else's trash pile," Sobelle says. "You might as well be seeing somebody's wine bottle from two weeks ago in a dumpster. And now that the planet is so overpopulated, and we produce so many things, it will be different for future archeologists."

With that in mind, Sobelle created his first solo show, "The Object Lesson," as "sort of an archeological dig site of the here and now." The performance, which premieres tonight as part of the Fringe Festival, is a piece of physical theater that lets Sobelle loose on a stage crammed with the detritus of a lifetime.

"I wanted to make a show about people's relationship to their stuff," Sobelle explains. "Buying, selling, getting rid of, breaking, losing, finding, trading, storing. In a way, the show is both about meaning and meaninglessness, because what might be meaningful to you is meaningless to me, and vice versa. I find that mysterious and hilarious."

A Fringe veteran, Sobelle has appeared in several shows with Pig Iron Theatre Company and rainpan 43, his collaboration with actor Trey Lyford. Sobelle was one-third of the ridiculously haired magician trio in last year's Fringe show "Elephant Room" and played a particularly athletic Hamlet in Lantern Theater Company's 2009 production. That physicality will now be constrained by a multitude of boxes on the stage of Christ Church Neighborhood House, on a set that Sobelle likens to a massive storage facility. "The thing that was important to me was that you came into a space of potential that was both empty and full at the same time," he says.

As for undertaking his first solo endeavor, Sobelle says, "I learned a lot about myself during the process. It's ultimately quite freeing as well." And of course, after three years of obsessing over things, "I'm dying to get rid of stuff."

Vampire Weekend are, from left, Ezra Koenig, Rostam Batmanglij, Chris Baio and Chris Tomson. They kick off their tour at the Mann Center for Performing Arts on Sept. 19. They're now playing the biggest venues of their career. When asked how he feels about this, Batmanglij says he likes that he can stroll freely around the city unrecognized, but still get so many people to go see his band. "I think we have carved out a little space that's our own, and I think we're pretty happy about that," he says. "I think it's a pretty good place to be. Who knows what will happen in the future, but I like that we've never felt like we weren't being ourselves." / ALEX JOHN BECK

"Modern Vampires of the City." As the band prepares to go on the road for another set of dates, main men Ezra Koenig and Rostam Batmanglij are right where they belong.

Vampire Weekend lyrics have always read a bit like witty TripAdvisor entries. Location is an essential part of the experience, whether it be "Cape Cod Kwassa Kwassa" of their self-titled debut or "California English" of 2010's "Contra." The band's latest release, "Modern Vampires of the City," throws in more geographical references than the first two albums combined. Anchorage, Oakland, Dar es Salaam, Providence, Phoenix and Santa Barbara all get lip service. Though that may give the impression that the album is literally all over the map, the titular "City" they reference most is New York, and the collection of songs is possibly their most cohesive effort to date.

"On the first album, all of the Cape Cod places that I name-checked were places that I actually had been, albeit somewhat briefly," says singer Ezra Koenig.

He is sitting in a cafe down the street from his apartment on the Lower East Side. For a guy who sings with a band whose last two albums went to No. 1, he is comfortably anonymous in his neighborhood. Only one passerby seems to slip into an "I know that guy from somewhere" expression.

"On the song, 'Step' on this album, there is a lot of name-checking," Koenig continues, "and I've never been to someplace like Dar es Salaam, but part of that song is about somebody who in the beginning is talking about how they were going to all of these different places, but really back at home is where they really have to figure things out."

It seems like Koenig spent a lot of time at home figuring things out. The theme of mortality is persistent throughout "Modern Vampires," with a lot of breath spent on uncertainty about what may be next; after this life, and more immediately, after this album. He says reflecting like this is almost a rite of passage for a band at this phase.

"Whether you're in college or in your early 20s doing whatever, there's a sense that it's an eternal springtime. And that's also true for a band that's making their first album," he says. "Then when you do something a second time it's still exciting, and you're building and you start to get to the third time, and unless you're a total craven careerist, you're going to pause a little bit and be like, 'OK, so we're doing this for a third time. We're now five or six years older than when we started. Is this just a job? Are we just banging out products of

"Unless you're a total craven careerist, you're going to pause a little bit and be like, 'OK, so we're doing this for a third time. We're now five or six years older than when we started. Is this just a job? Are we just banging out products of varying degrees of quality, based on an initial template?'" Ezra Koenig varying degrees of quality, based on an initial template? Or are we trying to do something different?'"

He and songwriting cohort Rostam Batmanglij spent the better part of a year making sure they were trying to do something different, writing and recording at Batmanglij's apartment under the Manhattan Bridge Overpass. Batmanglij had produced the first two VW albums, but late in the process the group decided to bring in an outside source, Ariel Rechtshaid, who had produced hits for Usher and No Doubt.

"We can just focus on recordings and we can have Ariel listen to stuff," says Batmanglij, sitting in the kitchen of the apartment where he and Koenig spent so many late-night sessions tracking these songs. It was helpful to be able to let go of some of the technical aspects of what being the sole producer entails.

"It wasn't so much relinquishing; it was more sharing the role of producer. … It was nice to have someone else who could really focus on production and who had a fresh take on things."

The songs rely less on the African beats and chord structures that characterized VW's first two efforts and instead integrate other outside sources. Some of Koenig's phrasing is informed by hip-hop, but Batmanglij's relentless experimentation removes it from that context. In the song, "Step" — the aforementioned one with all the geographical references — the singer borrows some rhymes from a forgotten '90s hip-hop act and combines it with proud boasts like, "The gloves are off, the wisdom teeth are out," as Batmanglij uses an unlikely harpsichord sound.

"At one point, I was like, 'What if all of the organ chords were minor chords, but they fit into this descending scheme?' What you hear in some ways sounds happy and familiar, but on another level it's sad and brooding," he says. "I remember at one point in that song getting a very distinct feeling of a place in Manhattan called Riverside Park. … In the middle of working on the song, it was like I was standing there. I felt like we were onto something good because I had such a distinct feeling."

Perhaps this is why they always sing about faraway places; because the music can take them there. But when on tour, the songs can bring them home.

What exactly do Modern Vampires listen to?

Throughout two hour-long discussions with VW's chief songwriters, music obviously comes up a lot. The references Koenig and Batmanglij throw around are often surprising. The title of the new album comes from the song "One Blood" by reggae artist Junior Reid. Here is a sampling of a few of the other artists the pair discussed.

The Clash were a band Koenig idolized. / EBET ROBERTS, REDFERNS

"Kanye is probably the greatest artist of our generation, and he's always talking about how he doesn't give a f—, but he's also always talking about how he does give a f—. It's two sides of the same coin. I would love to eventually get to a place where I could be so relaxed and be like, 'As long as we think it's good, nothing in the world matters.' But that's not exactly what this whole world of music that we participate in is about." KOENIG

"The Walkmen should be bigger; they are a great band. But I think there's a lot of people that feel the way we do." BATMANGLIJ

"If you grew up obsessing about pop music and idolizing people like The Clash or Radiohead or Prince, who were able to have long careers in which they changed a lot, part of that is because in addition to following their own visions, they were also able to create things that mattered to people. I think that it's really cool that The Clash came out and made this early punk album … and then six or seven years later they made this dancey hip-hop song about the Middle East that was like a huge hit." KOENIG

Batmanglij's thoughts

"The apples are bigger, but they don't taste quite as much like apples"

Batmanglij says he tries to buy his food at farmers markets. / BEN GABBE, GETTY

Ever wonder why those huge red apples look so juicy and yummy but have no flavor? Vampire Weekend's Rostam Batmanglij has given it some thought.

"In America, you notice that the apples are bigger, but they don't taste quite as much like apples. They have less of that inherent apple quality, whereas in Europe, the apples are smaller, but they do taste better," he tells Metro.

"One thing from traveling that I've thought about is genetically modified foods. It's interesting for me to be in a place — like France for example — where they don't allow anything genetically modified, things like apples, ... apricots or peaches or nectarines," he muses.

For him, there seems no question on choosing non-GMOs and buying local: "I grew up in a city, but my parents have always tried to support local farmers, and we've always gone to the farmers market every Sunday in D.C. I still go back there. The experience of buying food from farmers and it not always looking picture-perfect, but it tasting more real, that experience is something I think about a lot. I don't know what will happen in the future. I can imagine things turning towards more organic food. But, I also think some of the damage is irreparable. ... I do worry about that."

METRO

A genetically modified Vampire? No thanks

Special cause. Vampire Weekend think Americans have the right to know what is in their food. Thankfully, the Just Label It group are on the case.

This ain't the same type of apple your grandparents ate. / FUSE

Focaccia, whole-wheat, whatever: The bread you eat isn't the same bread your grandparents ate. Unless it's organically grown, wheat is genetically engineered for high yield and high profit. And, guess what, today's wheat is higher in gluten.

We're all chomping down GE ingredients, also known as GMOs — genetically modified organisms — without knowing, because, in America, labeling isn't required. The food industry at large claims changing labels will push up food prices.

Not so, says the Just Label It campaign, which is lobbying Washington, D.C., to introduce required labeling of all GMO foods. Just Label It held a press conference yesterday for food marketing expert Kai Robertson's new report, "Why Label Changes Don't Affect Food Prices."

"Sixty-four countries believe consumers have the right to know, including China, Russia and Saudi Arabia," said Scott Faber, executive director of Just Label It. "But in the land of the free, we do not have the same right. This report shows there is no evidence that label changes influence the cost of production."

Ben and Jerry's co-founder Jerry Greenfield said his company supports required labeling.

"Consumers have a fundamental right to know," he said. "As a food company, we regularly make changes to packaging, anything from a 15 to 25 percent redo to a full redesign. It's a normal part of a business and the effect on price is negligible. The cost of milk affects our price, not adding five words to the packaging."

Fashion Week: Kors and Jacobs

MARC BY MARC JACOBS GETTY IMAGES

Marc by Marc Jacobs pre-show

"Is Marc Jacobs still starting his shows on time?" Karla Martinez, editor at W magazine, runs up and asks me as we cross a traffic intersection. We're two blocks away from the pier where he'll be showing his Marc by Marc Jacobs collection. But Jacobs has been known for starting his shows exactly on the hour ever since he got into a public throwdown with the International Herald Tribune's Suzy Menkes (along with a slew of other editors) over his notoriously late start times several years ago. It turns out the answer to Martinez's question is now a "no," which is a good thing, since we got there about 10 minutes late.

Marc by Marc Jacobs

It feels natural to see sneakers integrated into this collection. But rather than the bold trainers I've been seeing on the street, Jacobs seems to be showing remixed versions of the Stan Smiths he used to wear back in the day. Easy, loosely tailored looks such as a slouchy black satin trouser suit styled with a white tank and red scarf also harken back to Jacobs' personal uniform of old. Even the dresses and jumpsuits (trending this week) seem to wear as easily as sweatpants. But not even Jacobs is immune to rough patches, like a series of graphic, pastel-colored looks in a pattern he's called "radio waves," which seems to take his tailoring to a campy place.

Michael Kors pre-show

Michael Kors

I find myself wishing that the show notes came with an order form. I don't buy a lot of Michael Kors, so I'm surprised by the visceral reaction I'm having to his fluid, vaguely '70s dresses and languid trousers. He's described the show as "summer romance" with a "juxtaposition of sportif and romantic." It works.

Walsh and Goodman found themselves falling for each other, going to couples therapy, taking a vacation, fighting, making up and ultimately breaking up during the course of their experiment, which they documented on www.fortydaysofdating.com. / OSVALDO PONTON

40 Days of Dating: Where they are now — and their future plans

Online. The authors of the viral blog dish on if they've found their way back to each other.

Longtime NYC friends Jessica Walsh, 26, and Timothy Goodman, 32, decided to take a leap and participate in what they call an "experiment:" Date each other exclusively for 40 days and document the experience online. That now-viral blog, 40 Days of Dating, came to a close on April 28 with the friends-turned-lovers releasing the final installment of their blog on Sept. 6. They revealed they chose to go their separate ways, but remain friends — much to the chagrin of the romantics in the world.

What was it like to see this project come to a close online?
Walsh: I have mixed feelings about it. The project happened over four months ago, and as we posted the daily entries day by day, it felt in some strange way that I had to relive that chapter of my life again with the public weighing in. It felt a little surreal. While I am so glad that the project reached so many people and seemed to touch so many people, it is also nice to close that chapter and focus on the present.
Goodman: It was difficult, yet cathartic, to relive the whole experience for the second time — particularly with an audience watching.

Jessica, what was your reaction when you read Tim's account of those last couple days — especially when you read that he was in love with you?
Walsh: I was shocked. It was very strange to hear months after the experiment was over that he was in love with me; I had no idea he felt that way.

Did you have different expectations for how the project would end?
Walsh: No. I truly had no idea what would happen at the end of the experiment. We certainly had no idea the blog would go viral, or that there would be so much interest from Hollywood. While exciting, it's been overwhelming. We are evaluating options, but the most important thing to us is maintaining the integrity and honesty of what we originally created with the blog. We have no interest in just taking a paycheck. Much has happened since the 40 days between Tim and me, and we have numerous fans demanding to hear an account of what has happened. We are likely going to work on a book version of the blog that will elaborate on the 40 days, and detail what took place after.
Goodman: I think we probably did, but I can't speak for Jessica. I wanted to use the parameters of the experiment to gain insight into my habits and fears. It was a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.

The city foodie scene spills out to the suburbs

Westward ho!

Philly is a food hub, there's no way around it. And being that the city can only hold so many restaurants within its limits, it makes perfect sense that the cuisine scene is spilling out of the narrow urban streets and into the sprawl of the Main Line.

We've seen White Dog Cafe make its way into Wayne for a second location. Then there's chef and restaurateur Chip Roman — co-owner of Ela in Queen Village — who flexed his Main Line muscles with restaurants Blackfish and Mica. New to the list of fine just-out-of-Philly dining is the recently opened Peppercorn, also in Wayne.

One of the restaurant's goals is to appeal to all dining-out tastes. You can see it in the design — the space is broken up into casual bar, main dining room, chef's table and private event room. "The design is very reminiscent of a home, and we wanted to keep it that way to make people feel comfortable," says Peppercorn general manager Aaron Kavulich of the 165-seat restaurant. "It's a large space, and it's designed so well." The size, of course, is something that you won't normally find in Philadelphia.

"What's great about the city is that you can get everything you need," says Kavulich. "However, they don't have everything you need in one place." And that's where Peppercorn's price range comes into play. You can get a $25 cut of meat, but you also have the option of a $9 burger.

"We focused hard on being able to provide inexpensive items, moderately expensive items and luxury options on the menu," Kavulich says. "We're following what the public wants and demands. People on the Main Line want something like this. They don't want to always go into the city for elevated cuisine."

Whether it's inside the city or just on the fringe, one thing is clear: The food scene is not slowing down.

Union Taco

It's a game of give and take when it comes to food in this town. While some restaurateurs are branching out to the Main Line, others are finding their way into the city proper. Take, for example, Nick Farina, who has Verdad Restaurant & Tequila Bar in Bryn Mawr and is now opening Union Taco, a 20-seat taqueria at 7th and Girard.

PROVIDED

Chances are good that if you follow the food scene in Philly, you recognize Jim Coleman's face — or his voice. In addition to being behind the scenes in popular kitchens, the chef has spent time in front of the camera for "Flavors of Philadelphia" and at the microphone too, hosting WHYY's "A Chef's Table" for 14 years.

He opened Normandy Farm, a hotel and banquet center in Blue Bell, and now he's at Liberte Lounge at the Sofitel. Later this month he'll be whipping up wine-friendly snacks for Liberte's French Wine Week, highlighting a different region each night from Sept. 23-28.

You hosted a TV show in the late '90s. If you did that show today, how would it differ?
I think it would be better, first of all. I think there's so much more to do today. We could cover local chefs, maybe go to their restaurants, then bring them into the studio for the cooking segment. There are so many up-and-coming chefs. Places are opening left and right. There are young guys and guys that have been around for a while, so there would be a lot more avenues to go down for the show.

You've worked with celebrities and politicians. Any stories you can share?
When I was working at the Rittenhouse [Hotel], Bruce Willis was around. He had been there to film "The Sixth Sense" and was back to film "Unbreakable," I think. I got to know him a little from his time there, and he was very approachable. When he came back for the second time he asked me what had opened and asked me to show him around town. [Restaurateur Stephen] Starr had just opened new places, so I remember we went to Buddakan that night. I felt pretty great going around town with Bruce Willis.

Culinary school

Do all of these on-the-rise chefs make you nervous?

I think it's awesome. It makes you feel good about where it's all going. It became disconcerting a few years back with the boom of Food Network. People wanted to get into the business for the wrong reasons. They wanted to cook to be on TV. I'd always say, "Go to acting school then, not culinary school." There were all these myths that you could make money after culinary school. Now I see a bunch of dedicated chefs that are doing it for the right reason: the food. I'd be more worried about these guys if I were 15 years younger.

The towers fell on all of us

I want to thank you for your recent front page cover in Spanish. I am a New York-born daughter of Puerto Rican parents who migrated in the 1950s. I love the Spanish language and did not really learn to speak it fluently till I was in my mid-20s. English is my first language. I find it interesting that although you explain in the paper inside, some people still took offense. Are there not more important things to complain about than a front cover in Spanish? Are we not all human beings? Here some people seem to resist learning another language. There is a resistance to people who are considered "outsiders," but we have all heard how this country was built by immigrants — and they were NOT all of European descent. Please. Don't let another language be the thing that keeps you from meeting people of other cultures and ethnicities. When the towers fell, sadly, they fell on all of us.
MARIBELLE VAZQUEZ, VIA EMAIL

The past is no excuse

We are reluctant about Syria because we don't trust our conscience, because we trusted it when we went to Iraq 10 years ago. But the moral imperative was not wrong. We were wrong because we misunderstood credibility — and still do. The Syria mass murder is different from Iraq, because we already proved that Syria has and is using WMDs right now. Excuses about America's past will not alleviate our guilt for not acting now. We do not judge the quality of death; we judge that Assad's use of sarin gas is against international law and therefore intervention is reasonable.

NFL power rankings | by Mike Greger

No. 1

49ers (1-0)

Are you still worried about those receivers? Vernon Davis and Anquan Boldin were scary good against the Packers — and Colin Kaepernick (412 yards, three touchdowns through the air) is Randall Cunningham on acid. (Yes, that is a good thing.) Tough test this week against Seattle in what could be an NFC Championship Game preview.

No. 2

Broncos (1-0)

No. 3

Seahawks (1-0)

They escaped Carolina. Barely. The rushing attack never found its stride, and the offensive line gave up two sacks.

No. 4

Patriots (1-0)

Danny Amendola, Zach Sudfeld and Shane Vereen were all added to the walking wounded. Luckily, they get the Jets next.

No. 5

Texans (1-0)

Impressive comeback. The kind of win that sets a tone for the season. Matt Schaub showed he can beat you with his arm.

No. 6

Packers (0-1)

Turns out, the concerns about Green Bay's secondary were not overblown. The middle of the field was a sieve.

No. 7

Saints (1-0)

This team looks better under Sean Payton, doesn't it? Drew Brees wasn't his sharpest, but still threw for 357 yards.

No. 8

Falcons (0-1)

There were positives in a Week 1 loss. RB Steven Jackson looked revitalized (77 yards) and WR Harry Douglas is a burner.

No. 9

Bears (1-0)

Jay Cutler looks like he's embracing change. The new coach allows him to let it rip, and he's throwing from a clean pocket.

No. 10

Bengals (0-1)

Turnovers were the only thing stopping the boys in stripes. That Andy Dalton-to-A.J. Green connection is unstoppable.

No. 11

Eagles (1-0)

Chip Kelly's hyper-speed offense had everyone confused. We're not sure it can work for 16 games, but it will be fun.

No. 12

Ravens (0-1)

There are way too many question marks on offense to pencil them in for a repeat. Make no mistake, though, they'll compete.

No. 13

Colts (1-0)

We heard Andrew Luck was going to be using his legs. His 19-yard run sealed another comeback win for Captain Clutch.

No. 14

Chiefs (1-0)

We figured Andy Reid would produce with one of the NFL's most talented rosters. They can fly on both sides of the ball.

No. 15

Lions (1-0)

Reggie Bush is in the running for MVP, or Most Improved Player. He looks like he's back at USC in this revamped offense.

No. 16

Dolphins (1-0)

Mike Wallace is complaining after being limited to one catch. He needs to get over it. The double coverage freed up others.

No. 17

Cowboys (1-0)

Like the Eagles, Dallas is using a no-huddle attack, sticking with short passes and quick tempo. They forced six turnovers.

FANTASY

ADAM LEVITAN, LIVING THE FANTASY

METRO'S FANTASY GURU BREAKS IT ALL DOWN

NFL news

After the Colts narrowly beat the Raiders, the first thing the coaching staff talked about was getting T.Y. Hilton more involved. The dynamic playmaker played on 45.6 percent of the snaps and caught three balls for 20 yards. Hilton is going to start getting the nod in more two-wide sets and having plays designed for him.

SINGING THE BLUES OF ROUND 2 FLOPS

We have first trimester panic every year in fantasy football, but this year it's bubbling over earlier than usual. That's what happens when second-round picks are getting benched, and just one of the first-round running backs (LeSean McCoy) goes for more than 100 rushing yards.

Wilson, Wilson. David Wilson played as poorly as a running back can play in Week 1. That doesn't mean the Giants will give up on him. Remember that he fumbled in last year's opener and then went 15 games (127 total touches) without one.

Brandon Jacobs has been brought in to help on third downs and at the goal line, but the early-down work will still belong to Wilson as long as he cleans up his game.

Given his exceedingly impressive talent and the Giants' desperate need to make it work, now is the time to buy low.

Ridley rising. After Stevan Ridley lost a non-contact fumble in the second quarter Sunday, he didn't play another snap. But now that Shane Vereen (wrist) and Danny Amendola (groin) are both out, New England is desperate for weapons.

Ridley showed last year he can be an offensive centerpiece. Expect him to get at least 20 carries against the Jets tonight.

Don't panic. Robert Griffin III insists his knee is 100 percent, but it sure didn't look like it as he lugged around a couple of braces. He was slow to get the corner, appeared hesitant to fully step into his throws and rushed just five times for 24 yards

Most concerning was that the Redskins didn't call many zone-read plays. Griffin should get sharper, but if you had a draft today, then Mike Vick would be a better pick.

CARFAX VEHICLE HISTORY REPORTS

GETTY IMAGES

Eagles. Offensive coordinator happy with McCoy's role

The biggest challenge for the Eagles is figuring out a way to keep the guys fresh. Coach Chip Kelly admitted that he needed to do a better job rotating some of the backups in.

LeSean McCoy rushed for 184 yards on a career-high 31 carries. While the coaching staff doesn't want to tire him out, they are not ruling out giving McCoy that kind of workload again.

"We won the game. He carried the ball well, was very productive," offensive coordinator Pat Shurmur said. "Obviously, we want everybody that's active to play, and he did a good job, and he'll be out here running and practicing today, so that's not a problem."

Shurmur noted that despite getting the win Monday night, he noticed a lot of mistakes when reviewing the game film.

Blocking out

The coaching staff has instructed Mike Vick not to serve as a lead blocker on rushing plays.

- "We don't want him lead blocking on sweeps, and so we told him don't do that," said Shurmur. "So we assume he won't."

He also echoed Kelly's comments that the Eagles want to play at an even faster pace.

"There's been a lot of conversation about how we won," Shurmur said. "When we looked at the tape, we saw lots of errors, way more than we want to have. ... I know coach Kelly commented on how we can play much faster, as well."

SEABROOK HOUSE

HELPING FAMILIES FIND THE COURAGE TO RECOVER

Seabrook House is an internationally recognized, private CARF-accredited addiction treatment center with several locations. The main facility is located in Bridgeton, NJ.

Our main campus is home to our detox and inpatient residential programs, various outpatient programs and our high-end women's extended care program, Changes for Women.

Our luxurious 90-day transitional living facility for men, Seabrook House West, is located in north central Pennsylvania in the town of Westfield.

Seabrook House has two new outpatient offices in Cherry Hill and Northfield, NJ, and a regional office located in New York City.

Seabrook House has been helping families find the courage to find recovery from alcoholism, drug addiction, substance abuse and other compulsive diseases since 1974.
